This achievement will benefit 2,750 people through awareness generation, caregiver education, and the training of medical students and healthcare volunteers to promote early recognition of the signs and symptoms associated with ADHD and Alzheimer's disease.

Aahana effectively engaged diverse community members and potential funders through her strong verbal communication and persuasive skills. By leveraging multiple digital platforms to raise awareness, she successfully mobilised significant support and donations, reflecting her genuine commitment to inclusive education and public health.

Her ability to build meaningful connections and garner widespread support was instrumental in the campaign's success. Through this experience, she has developed the valuable capacity to integrate storytelling, technology, consumer behaviour, and communication skills to drive meaningful social impact. She is determined to apply these learnings as essential life skills in her future endeavours.

We are confident that Aahana will be a valuable asset and a proactive leader in any institution or organisation she joins. We wish her continued success in all her future pursuits.
